

Equity Weekly

Charity is a virtue. Yet giving without wisdom may not always help. This week we ask how to improve the lives of street beggars. And in our feature, we give you an insight on the yam market.

Helping beggars (main story)

In Asian culture, giving money to the poor is seen as a good deed. But is it the best way to help beggars? Some NGOs run social projects to help beggars on a long term. We ask citizens how they prefer to help. Experts suggest that giving money is not really the way out of poverty.

Yams in Crisis (feature)

This season has been a dramatic one for yam farmers. Due to the drought, they lost their first crop and had to buy new seedlings from Vietnam, at a very high cost. This led villagers to steal from each other. How will farmers manage to solve this situation?

POLITICS AND SOCIETY:

Ouy Bounmy interviews the Council of Ministers on the issue of the recent guidelines on the resettlement of urban communities, approved earlier this week. Will this help the Tuol Kork blaze victims?

EQUITY'S TEASER

In our teaser, we look at sewage systems built under existing roads. Is it possible to plan in advance and build sewage systems before building the roads?
